To Spend Huge Sums In U. S. For Israel

Three leading Israeli industrialists and financial experts, including the head of the Israel Knesset's (Parliament) Economic Commission, announced at a special press conference in the offices of Ampal-American Palestine Trading Corp., 17 East 71st Street, in New York, that they will purchase approximately fifteen million dollars worth of raw material, machinery and equipment, construction items, new busses, spare parts, tires and lubrication supplies in the U. S. Abraham Dickenstein, president of Ampal, the largest single investor in Israel, said that his corporation will finance a part of these purchases from the proceeds of the sale of its three per cent Sinking Fund Debentures. The purchases will be executed by Ampal's subsidiary, Israel Purchasing Service. Mr. Dickenstein went to Israel to discuss with his associates and Government authorities the ways and means of enlarging dollar credits in the U.S. for the financing of Israeli purchases.

The three Israeli officials, who recently arrived in the U.S. for this specific purpose of purchasing these varied items are Shraga Goren, general manager of the Producers' and Service Cooperatives in Israel, the largest operators in the transportation field in that country, who is also head of the Economic Commission of the Knesseth; Hillel Dan, managing director of Solel Boneh, Ltd., the largest contracting enterprise in Israel and the entire Middle East, whose principle activities over the course of the last thirty years have been devoted to building and road

U. S. Mizrachi To Settle 100 Families

Following two months of negotiation with the Aliyah (Immigration) Department of the American section of the Jewish Executive and the Jewish National Fund, the Mizrachi religious-Zionist Organization of America announced plans for the establishment during the coming year of the first all-religious agricultural settlement for 100 observant American Jewish families from the "middle class" economic level. Rabbi Max Kirshblum, acting president of Mizrachi, conducted the negotiations with the Jewish Agency and the Jewish National Fund. Rabbi Kirshblum, national executive vice-president of the religious-Zionist movement, is serving in the absence of Dr. Pinkhos Churgin, who is on a visit in Israel.

The Mizrachi project is the first development in a larger program for the settlement of "middle class" American Jewish families in Israel for which the Jewish National Fund is allocating 20,000 dunams of land (about 5,000 acres) in various sections of the Jewish State. The religious-Zionist farm community is scheduled to be established on 2,000 dunams (about 500 acres) between Gederah and Gan Yavneh, in southern Israel. Each of the 100 religious American families who will be accepted as settlers in the Mizrachi community is expected to invest a minimum of $5,000. The Jewish Agency, in turn, is prepared to grant a long-term loan of equal amount in order to enable the settlers to launch the building of houses, erection of farm buildings, the installation and preparation of the land and planting. Each of the settlers, Rabbi

PREACHES AGAINST U. S. LOAN TO SPAIN

Rabbi Israel Goldstein, of Congregation Bnai Jeshrun, 257 West Eighty-eighth Street, New York, opposed a U.S. Government loan of $100,000,000 to Spain in a Sabbath sermon. He said it "would be playing into the hands of the Soviet Union in its propaganda against us."

"The decision taken in the United States Senate to extend a loan of $100,000,000 to Franco Spain," he went on, "is as unconscionable morally as it is inept strategically in the psychological warfare now going on between the U.S.S.R. and the United States.

"Public memory is not so short as not to remember that only a brief decade ago Franco considered himself in the Hitler orbit and spurned the Western democracies. What face can be put on the American crusade against totalitarianism if the United States extends a helping hand to Franco Spain, one of the most notorious of the totalitarian regimes?

"It would be a defeat in the psychological and moral realm more damaging to the prestige of the United States than the military setbacks which have been suffered in Korea. It must not be permitted to come to pass."

Debate Abolition Of Death Penalty

The abolition of capital punishment in Israel is now being debated in the Knesset (Parliament). The current law inherited from the British Mandate Government provides for death penalties for treason as well as for premeditated murder, murder to facilitate any other crime or escape, and murder of parents or grandparents. Execution is by hanging.

Since the state of Israel was proclaimed in May, 1948, there have been no executions. At one of the early meetings of the Provisional State Council in 1948, religious members opposing capital punishment elicited an understanding from the Minister of Justice that no death sentences would be carried out pending a decision by the legislature on the question of capital punishment.

The courts, however, continued sentencing convicted murderers to the gallows. There are seven condemned men in the death cells of Israeli prisons — some have been there for more than a year—awaiting their fate.

In a full-dress debate in the Knesset on the issue, the Chamber appeared unanimously to favor hanging Nazi war criminals and persons convicted of genocide. Otherwise, the legislature was split into three camps:

1. A faction, led by the Minister of Justice, that favored abolishing capital punishment for murder, but retaining it for treason in wartime.
2. Another group, led by the Minister of Police, that wanted to retain the death penalty also for murder.
3. Most of the leftist opposition and the Religious Bloc, which favored the total abolition of capital punishment, except for the crime of genocide.

The whole package was passed on to the Parliamentary Legislation Committee. The question will return to the Legislature for a final vote after the summer recess.

The main argument for abolishing capital punishment was that it was irrevocable, and there was a danger of miscarriage of justice. Justice Minister Pinchas Rosen said the danger was great in a country like Israel with its heterogenous population; as judges and prisoners frequently did not speak the same language, there was a grave danger of misunderstanding.

Most of the Orthodox members opposed the death penalty on religious grounds. The maintenance of the death penalty for treason in wartime was opposed by the Leftist opposition, says the New York Times. Other Opposition members also argued that the abolition of the death penalty for murder and its retention for treason would give the Ben-Gurion Government a weapon against political opponents.

Idov Cohen (Progressive) explained why traitors should be sent to the gallows, and not murderers. Ordinary killers, he said, would be deterred as much by the prospect of life imprisonment as by the threat of death. In some ways, he declared, life imprisonment was

All Immigrants To Work In Israel Camps

Under a new radically changed absorption policy, immigrants must work or relinquish their right to any of the Government's housing projects. This plan, adopted by the Jewish Agency for Palestine, will affect at least 60,000 persons now in immigration camps.

It will not be applied against so-called social cases, or families whose breadwinners are over 45. These will automatically move on from immigration centers to housing projects when possible. The policy change is aimed at those able-bodied immigrants who have consistently refused to accept work except of the white collar kind or who have been content to sit idly in camps for an indefinite period while the Jewish Agency pays the bill.

The decision was reached after the Agency, in cooperation with the Government, realistically faced the fact that immigration was on the increase and could not be planned effectively or regulated. J. Braginsky, member of the Jewish Agency executive, estimated that a monthly immigration rate of 18,000 could be expected soon.

There is also a possibility that the Soviet Union may allow a certain number of Jews to depart for Israel, within a specified period, and Israel wants to make sure that it could accept them, reports the New York Times. The large numbers arriving from Rumania must be taken in before that part of the Iron Curtain drops again.

The latest plan calls for the transfer of about 15,000 families from immigration centers to transit camps, largely ten cities that either themselves provide employment or are near industrial centers.

G. Josephtal, director of the Agency's absorption department, declared that no immigrant would be permitted to benefit from any housing plan unless he spent some time in one of these "work camps."

Since the state of Israel was formed twenty-seven months ago, 450,000 immigrants have been taken into camps or homes. Of these, about 30,000 were considered social cases who could not provide for themselves. Others were able-bodied, but many of them decided to become perennial charity cases.

Paper Match Inventor Was Once Bootblack

Leo Greenbaum of 148 Central Park West, New York, president of the Lion Match Company, died in Lenox Hill Hospital after a long illness. His age was 74. Born in Germany, a son of Moses and Mina Karpf Greenbaum, Mr. Greenbaum came to the United States at the age of thirteen and began as a bootblack. Entering the restaurant business, he became a bus boy, then a waiter. Subsequently he was manager and in 1910 owner of the Cafe Leo at Fourteenth Street and Fourth Avenue.

Before prohibition, Mr. Greenbaum sold the restaurant and in 1917 began manufacturing paper matches in a one-machine plant in lower Manhattan. Three or four years later he moved the factory to Pacific Street, Brooklyn, and in 1924 to Long Island City, where it now occupies three large buildings.

Mr. Greenbaum was credited with inventing the "feature" paper match, with shaped matches and printing on them, and many novelty matches, including the so-called giant matches. He was a member of the Elks, the Masons and the Metropolis Country and Harmonie Clubs.

Says D. P. Are Moved To U. S. Too Slowly

Deep concern over the slowness with which displaced persons are being moved to the United States was expressed at Geneva, Switzerland, by members of the advisory council of the United States Displaced Persons Commission after completion of a detailed survey of the situation of refugees in Europe.

"Time is running out," Arthur Greenleigh executive director of the United Service for New Americans and spokesman for the group, said at a press conference. He said that the group, which represents state governments and voluntary agencies from all parts of the United States, was convinced that movement of displaced persons eligible under present United States laws was being delayed by procedural administrative problems that should be capable of solution.

"We are deeply concerned that the will of the American people as expressed in the Displaced Persons Act of 1950 is not being carried out," he said.

Mr. Greenleigh, speaking for the entire group, cited four factors as responsible for the delay. These were the inevitable problems of changing over from the old law to the new and the shortage of per-construction; and Aaron Weisberg, a member of the executive of Solel Boneh, Ltd., who heads their purchasing mission in the U. S.

In emphasizing that his corporation was in immediate need of tires, spare parts and lubrication supplies, Mr. Goren said that he will seek to purchase at least 500 new buses at a cost of four million dollars; and that he will expend approximately $750,000, part of the $100,000,000 loan granted by the Export-Import Bank to Israel, for the purchase of industrial equipment and raw materials. Mr. Goren said that his corporation is a vital and integral part of Israel's economic framework, further disclosing that the network of his company covers the entire nation and numbers more than 375 co-operative enterprises and 58 settlements which embrace the following industries: goods transport, taxi services, passenger transport, buses, metal works, and electrical products, masonry and building materials, diamond cutting, wood industry, clothing, shoes, weaving, bakeries, restaurants and hotels, printing and allied products, food production, and such enterprises as glassware, ceramics, and chemicals. The entire combine, he added, employs close to 16,000 people for all these varied activities.

Hillel Dan and Aaron Weisberg, executives of Solel Boneh, Ltd., in stating that their company was the parent body of approximately forty subsidiaries, devoted to every phase of economic endeavor in Israel, said that they employ approximately 30,000 persons, and do more than 70 per cent of all building activities in the new nation, including housing, road construction, schools, hospitals, hotels, government and public buildings, factories, irrigation drainage and pipe lines. In the past year, they stated, the corporation spent more than $1,500,000 in the U. S. for additional constructive equipment, an amount allocated in part from the Export-Import Bank loan granted to Israel. He said that they have spent more than $700,000 for the purchase of new machinery and equipment for lime and Stone Production Co., Ltd., one of its subsidiaries, which operates forty quarries and kilns in various parts of the country. The subsidiaries' main products include marble slabs, plates, tombstones, hydrated lime, gypsum, and gravel, which is aimed at increasing the supply of building materials.

The Palestine Glass Works, Phoenicia, Ltd., another subsidiary, they said, will spend more than $600,000 for its new factory which will produce twenty million square feet of glass annually. Part of this latter figure will go for export to the countries of the Middle East. Their container plant has been enlarged to supply colored bottles and jars for Israel's beverage industry as well as household glassware. The Vulcan Foundries, Ltd., operators of the largest iron and non-iron foundry, is spending $250,000 for American up-to-date equipment which will enable this subsidiary to lower production costs and reduce the price of the finished product. The plant utilizes an enamelling unit for bath tubs and other cast iron as well as sheet metal articles. A special workshop is equipped with modern acetylene welding equipment and other machines for the production of autoclaves, mixing machines and seagoing steel trawlers.

Some of the subsidiaries include Hamat Tool and Machinery Mfg. Co., Ogen, Ltd., Herouth, Ltd., Hamgaper, Ltd., Amos Transport Service, Ltd., Palestine Portland Cement Works, Ltd., Nesher, jointly owned by Solel Boneh and private capital; the Middle East Tube Co., Ltd., and Israel Rolling Mill Co., Ltd. The Israel Rolling Mill will expend almost one million dollars in the U.S. for additional electric rollers.

U.S. MIZRACHI

Kirshblum said, will receive an area of 20-30 dunams of land (seven acres) on a permanent lease arrangement with the Jewish National Fund.

The farm will consist of about ten dunams of fruit trees and vineyard, 10 dunams for vegetables and green feed for livestock, and two dunams for the house, the yard and farm buildings. Each settler will also receive a certain amount of livestock, either 250 chickens or a cow. Additional branches of farming, such as beekeeping and flower growing, etc., can be developed in accordance with the capability and inclination of the individual settler. The farm will have water installations and other facilities of a developed community.

"The American Mizrachi movement," Rabbi Kirshblum said "is launching this project to meet the needs of many Jews, especially in English-speaking countries, who have a small amount of capital and want to go to Israel, but are faced with the problem of how to guarantee for themselves and their families a livelihood when they come to Israel. Because many are attracted by a rural way of life and because religious Jews are eager to live in communities where they can implement their traditional observances in case and collective harmony, the American Mizrachi movement is collaborating with the Jewish Agency's Immigration department, the Jewish National Fund, and the Agricultural Settlement Organizations (Yakhin and Rassco) for the development of this project."

This project, to be carried out by the Yakhin and Rassco firms of Israel, calls for the Mizrachi village to be set up on land adjacent to Gan Yavneh, which is an agricultural community settled by American Jews. It is planned to have this new community join Gan Yavneh at some future date. In the meantime, the facilities of Gan Yavneh, schools, clinic, movie houses, transportation, etc., will be utilized by the American Mizrachi villagers. Gan Yavneh is located 20 miles (45 minutes by bus) south of Tel Aviv near the main highway.

According to Zvi Lurie, head of the Agency's Immigration Department, the land of the projected Mizrachi settlement is rich, water is plentiful, and the climate is good. He added, in a communication to Rabbi Kirshblum, that "in view of the fact that the settlers will be new to agriculture and certainly new to Israel agriculture, arrangements have been made for instructors to guide them during their first period on the land."

Calling upon religious American Jews to consider this American Mizrachi village project, Rabbi Kirshbaum said: "This undertaking marks a new and indeed historic development in that it ushers in another constructive epoch for religious Jewry in America. Actually, we consider this but a beginning, a first step in the development of a long chain of religious middle-class settlements in Israel which will help contribute to and simultaneously balance the economy of Israel. This project also indicates that Israel is not alone an asylum for the prosecuted and oppressed, but a vigorous new frontier-land where alert men and women can find their fulfilment in working with their hands as they enrich their spiritual life. The American Mizrachi village will be constructed in cooperation with the World Federation of the General Mizrachi movement (Igud Olami shel Hamizrachi) whose offices are in Tel Aviv."

This is one form of getting back to nature that should be avoided, as raw milk may be a breeding place for swarms of germs and bacteria. You can pasteurize milk yourself by a safe, simple process. The Flowering Of Hebrew Culture In America

BY DR. ISRAEL GOLDSTEIN, OF NEW YORK

The emergence of Jewish Statehood, and the remarkable vitality exhibited by the Jews of Israel in so many spheres of endeavor can not be viewed as an isolated phenomenon. The wellsprings of the revolution in Jewish history which we are witnessing in our day draw their inspiration and momentum from the many decades of national Jewish reawakening, the rebirth of the Zionist-Hebraic ideal. The force of this rebirth, which produced outstanding statesmen and political figures on the one hand, and such cultural giants as Bialik, Achad Ha'am and Chernichovsky on the other, is largely responsible for the miracle of our age.

The renaissance of the Hebrew language released a latent source of Jewish energy and enabled our foremost creative spirits to give expression to age-old hopes and to buttress and strengthen them by their writings. As a result of the efforts of our poets and thinkers to revitalize the language of the Prophets, they breathed new spirit into the Jewish masses and attuned them to the possibilities of Jewish rebirth.

It is an historic task of equal magnitude which the Hebrew language and Hebrew culture are again called upon to perform in the largest Jewish community in the world. American Jewry, which has been so instrumental in the establishment of Jewish State where Hebrew is the living spoken and written tongue, is now itself in dire need of the cultural blessings which Hebrew can bring it. Hebrew is not only the strongest basis for the spiritual bridge which must be maintained with Israel, but even more important — it is an indispensable asset for Jewish creativity and survival here.

While American Jewry has not as yet fully risen to the cultural needs of the hour, there are fortunately many positive indications of a flowering of Hebrew culture in America and of a serious concern with the dissemination of Hebrew language study. In the forefront of this activity for more than three decades has been the Histadruth Ivrith of America (Hebrew Language and Culture Association) which has valiantly spearheaded a Hebrew movement and in its wake spread a knowledge of the Hebrew language among American Jews and stimulated the development of Hebrew literature and a Hebrew periodical press on the American scene.

Today, in New York City, 31 high schools and the four city colleges offer courses in Modern Hebrew. Other American cities, following the example set by the Jewish community of New York, are also introducing Hebrew into their public schools. There is widespread Hebrew activity throughout the country. This increased interest bears witness to a deeper appreciation of the role of Hebrew in American Jewish life and a growing realization that without Hebraic content Jewish education in America is anemic. The People of the Book should be at home in the language of the Book. The Jew needs it, the world respects it.

The Hebrew language and culture is not a new phenomenon in this country. In the early days of American universities, Hebrew had the same status as Greek and Latin and was a hallmark of culture. Today, when the Jewish population of the United States numbers more than five million, the Hebrew language and culture should be widespread. It is not only a hallmark of Jewish culture today, but an indispensable asset for Jewish survival. The broader aspect of Hebrew culture with its far reaching implications for our future is the responsibility of the Histadruth Ivrith and other educational agencies. A vital Hebrew movement is basic to the development of a periphery of Hebraic activity that will encompass the synagogue, the school and Jewish organized life.

In addition to making Hebrew books available to young and old in inexpensive Hebrew editions, translations, too, should be accelerated. Works like the monumental volume of the poetry of Hayyim Nahman Bialik in English translation, edited by Dr. Israel Efros for the Histadruth Ivrith last spring, should be followed by others of similar scope and calibre. American publishing houses should also be encouraged to issue contemporary Hebrew writings in translation as they do the works of European authors.

Publications such as the Hebrew weekly "Hadoar" and the "Sefer Hashanah" the American Hebrew Year Book, issued by the Histadruth Ivrith and edited by Menachem Ribalow have done much to stimulate Hebrew activity in this country. The many gifted Hebrew poets, novelists and essayists in this country who have found in these a medium of expression are deserving of our support and of a wider audience for their work.

An increasing number of scholarships for study in Israel should be made available to promising young students of Hebrew in the schools and colleges. American Jews should become aware of the value of awarding such scholarships and of establishing funds similar to the Guggenheim Fellowships for the encouragement of the Hebrew arts in our land.

I am giving my assistance to the Histadruth Ivrith in organizing a Committee of Patrons of Hebrew Culture. This is more than a matter of raising funds. It is essentially a task of finding a group of American Jews who, whether or not they themselves know Hebrew, are friends of Hebrew culture and are determined to see it flourish in America. There are patrons of French culture, Italian culture, and of the various arts in America. Why not patrons of Hebrew culture, the very key to Jewish creativity and survival?

An enduring link between American Jewry and Israel can be forged only through a common knowledge of the Hebrew language and our Hebrew literary heritage. The Histadruth Ivrith, by virtue of its pioneer record of Hebraic activity over a period of more than three decades and its central role in our cultural life, deserves a position of first rank on the map of American Jewish Activity.

Water forced into the nostrils during a "feet first" jump into the water not only stings unpleasantly but may carry dirt and germs to the tender surfaces of the nose, throat and sinuses. Diving is a far smoother and more graceful way of entering the water but, if you can't dive, don't be ashamed to hold your nose while you take the plunge.

Between-meal snacks that are planned to supplement the day's menu can make a real contribution to nutrition. Growing children, expectant and nursing mothers, active workers and those who are trying to regain health and strength frequently need more food in a day than they can comfortably consume in three meals. The secret is in eating the right between-meals food at the right time between meals.

seventeen graham crackers
ten marshmallows
one-half cup walnuts
one-half teaspoon vanilla
one cup chopped dates
six glazed cherries
one-third cup dessicated cocoanut
three tablespoons milk

Roll fourteen crackers fine. Cut marshmallows and cherries and combine. Then add milk or sweet cream, walnuts, vanilla, dates, and cocoanut. Add more milk if it is too dry. Form into long roll. Crush three more crackers, and use as covering for the roll, to prevent it from being sticky. Put in wax paper and place in refrigerator over night. Cut in narrow slices to serve.

These will be joined by Max Grossman and Harry Litwack, of the Toronto Tri-Bells, and Sydney Himel, of the Toronto Y. M.-Y. W. H. A. Grossman and Litwack played on the Ontario Senior Championship team which was defeated in the National Senior Eastern Final against the Montreal Y. M. H. The Toronto trio will spend Labour Day week-end in Montreal practicing with the Montreal basketeers.

Mr. Klein said that a minimum of 16 Canadians will go to the games, 13 of whom are athletes, the other two being officials. If additional money is available, additional athletes may go. Gelber, co-presidents of the Zionist Organization of Canada; and H. E. Herschorn, O.B.E.

• CANADIAN Jewish Congress: endorsed the declaration of Canadian policy on Korea in a telegram which Samuel Bronfman, national president, sent to Prime Minister St. Laurent. Mr. Bronfman stated in his telegram that, "The overwhelming majority of Canadians will commend you for your frank appraisal of Canada's international position with particular reference to the Korean situation and for the declaration of policy which will motivate the Canadian public through its government in meeting the great challenge which the police action in Korea manifests. Our generation has witnessed two cataclysmic wars which presaged an attack on the very foundations of civilization. The Korean aggression, master-minded from other lands, is a messenger of evil tidings unless the champions of decency, fair play and political sanity join together to stop this prologue before it becomes an even more tragic drama. Canada has determined, with other like-minded colleagues of the United Nations, that it will join in plans to bring to an end the aggression which, if continued, can only lead to total war. This engenders serious discussion and the public is tightly taken into the confidence of its leaders. Canadians, therefore, despite the impact of world events, all feel that their burden is lightened by the forthright and courageous attitude enunciated for Canada by its Prime Minister. The Canadian Jewish Congress endorses the declared policy as a mark of leadership and far-sightedness which will contribute to the joint efforts of the democracies to repel aggression."

Brushing the teeth has long been a standard method of helping maintain dental health, but dentists now know that brushing does little to prevent tooth decay unless it is done immediately after each meal. But even regular brushing is not the complete answer. See your dentist at least twice a year to ensure good dental health.

For most of us vacations come but once a year. For too many of us this means we have to crowd a year's recreation into a couple of weeks. Generally speaking, the body is not enthused about this idea and may object violently if we try to cram too much activity into a too-short "rest" period. Make sure you come back to work rested, not in need of a holiday to recuperate from your holiday.

Every summer hundreds of "city slickers" come out of the bush sporting a glorious coat of poison ivy contamination. This irritating and unsightly affliction is easily avoided. Poison ivy bears a distinctive, notched leaf that any novice can learn to recognize. It grows in patches that only the most careless should fail to notice. This is one form of botany every woodsman needs to know.

Our Hebraic Bond With Israel

BY AUBREY E. EBAN, ISRAELI ENVOY TO THE UNITED STATES

The revival of the Hebrew language is not a mere accompanying consequence of Israel's rise to independence and nationhood. It has been a motive cause and, perhaps, an indispensable condition in the unfolding of that process. It was a primary factor in the preservation of nationhood. Without it, it is a matter of history, I doubt whether a people compounded of so many diverse elements and derived from such a variety of social and cultural backgrounds, could ever have been merged within the period of two generations into the image of a distinctive cultural and national personality. Yet, that and no less is what has been achieved within the memory of a single lifetime.

This infinite pattern of diversity has been forgotten and submerged and national unity has emerged into the light of day. The sense of solidarity and of common responsibility in Israel, the habits of discipline and cooperation which mark Israel's performance in every sphere of its activity are in the last resort the consequence of an underlying cultural unity. The Hebrew language is the pivot of that process of unification. It unifies us on three separate planes.

Firstly, it creates harmony and synthesis amid the diverse elements which constitute the society of Israel today. Secondly, it unites the State of Israel and its society with all the corners of Jewish dispersion, and, thirdly, it unites both the State of Israel and the Jewish dispersion in contemporary times with the long sequence of historic continuity going back to the origins of our people. Thus we rely upon the Hebrew language as the instrument of nationhood, as a unifying link within the Jewish world and as the chief and decisive symbol of our historic and cultural continuity.

Without that possession it is doubtful if the process of nation-building could have been so speedily achieved. The establishment of Israel as an independent state makes new demands and proclaims a new challenge to the flexibility and resources of our language, for it has grown and developed with the expansion and development of Israel's institutions themselves. Agriculture, industry and technology in all its branches made unexpected calls upon our linguistic resources. That challenge has triumphantly been met. Today the very responsibilities of statecraft themselves require a constant expansion of terminology and vocabulary. The very business of the administration and representation of a state require new turns of thought and phrase to which previous generations need have had no recourse. Thus, the task is not merely to create new values but simultaneously to find methods for expressing them.

As we look around the contemporary international scene we become increasingly impressed with the vital role of language in the processes of national emancipation. Not every new nation achieving or restoring its independence has been as fortunate as we. The Irish people, discovering that linguistic distinctiveness was an essential attribute of national independence, were forced to revive a language whose literary traditions were far more meager and less continuous. Other nations have yet to achieve the linguistic counterpart to their national independence.

The great republic of India, numbering three hundred millions, has recently completed its national liberation. Yet it is divided by a score and a hundred of tongues. So much so, that its own institutions still have to rely upon English as the only lingua franca understood by all its elements. We now witness the arduous and unprecedented process whereby that country is giving itself a decade in which all its citizens and public servants must set to acquire the Hindu language which by 1960 is to be the sole expression and vehicle of official life. The fact that such a superhuman effort on an organized national scale is undertaken in that way is surely a decisive illustration of the fact that a common linguistic background and tradition is an essential attribute of national pride and solidarity.

What does all this, if anything, signify for American Jewry? The conclusion should be that the existence and development of the Hebrew Movement is, again, not a marginal problem of American Jewish life but may within our own generation become a crucial and decisive issue in American-Israel relationships. For Israel and the Jewish community of the United States today are united by the improvised bonds of recurring crises and emergency which keeps our tensions alive. There are political crises, economic tasks and the growing burden which we carry in common for the absorption of mass immigration. There is, of course, no early prospect that these emergencies and crises will no longer be with us. If any of us had ever had cause to believe that at least the political struggle was over and that Israel would no longer have need for the political and moral influence of the Jewish community in this country, the recent discussion in the United Nations regarding the internationalization of Jerusalem should have come as a clarion call against the temptations of premature relaxation of vigilance. I would summarize these new developments in one sentence. When a resolution comes into collision with a legitimate reality, it is the resolution that gets hurt and not the legitimate reality.

Those who will look back upon the political battle for Jerusalem in time to come, may well have reason to recall the resolution of the general assembly as an event which accelerated and deepened the already inevitable process of Jerusalem's integration with the State of Israel, bringing to a head a process already inexorable in its inevitability, dictated by historic continuity as well as by modern contemporary facts.

Normally, the feeling and sentiment which the people of a city feel towards the government to which they give undivided allegiance is something subconscious, latent and unexpressed. Only when challenged does it burst forth as a positive and dynamic force. All the sentiments, all the attractions, everything that argues a community of destiny and spirit between Israel and Jerusalem has been stimulated and strengthened. What we are confronted with, therefore, is not so much a struggle for Jerusalem's integration with Israel, which is anyhow assured, but a struggle for the rehabilitation of Israel's international relationships, the removal of an anomalous, artificial and gratuitous contrast between Israel's political objectives and the verdict of the general assembly.

Yet, the events under whose impression and impact the Jewish world is now living are sufficient in themselves to warn us against any presumptions that the partnership between Israel and American Jewry is no longer a necessary attribute of our political success. The financial and immigration emergency are too familiar to us all to need rehearsal but the question is what happens when the partnership founded upon improvised emergencies no longer exists, when Israel settles down into the boredom for which we have nostalgic anticipation, of a fully recognized, stable republic, having fulfilled its one passionate political longing, which is to be left alone? What happens when financial stability has been achieved, when the flood of immigration settles down as by the logic of mathematics it one day must, to a more normal and rational stream? How will the sense of kinship between Israel and the Jewish world be maintained when the hour of emergency has passed?

Surely, we must be left with the depressing conclusion that unless we can create within a matter of decades a sense of cultural and spiritual affinity, Israel and American Jewry will become foreign to each other. For remember that the process of Hebraization is going forward with increased momentum. It is indeed the chief process whereby the State of Israel hopes to harmonize the enormous diversity of population crowding into its ports and doors on every side. I tremble to think how the enormous immigration, numbering over three hundred thousand within a period of less than two years, could have been digested and assimilated into the fabric of Israel's society if there did not exist the Hebrew language and the Hebrew School as the synthesizing and harmonizing elements.

Yet, the life of Israel, political and economic, and all its forms of cultural expression are clothed and rested in the Hebrew language. Those who have no access to that language, however strong is the sentiment in their hearts, will find themselves in Israel deaf and dumb, unable either to convey their own sentiments or to absorb the expression of activity and culture which they see there. The development of the Hebrew Movement in this country is therefore essential if you do not wish Israel to be basically and fundamentally foreign, both to yourselves and to your children.

Seen in this light the work of the Histadruth Ivrith, Hebrew Culture and Language Association, sustained by smaller forces than those which have rallied to most other Jewish and Zionist causes in this country, assumes a crucial importance in the light of future American-Israel relationships. Let us hope that the growing awareness of the role of Hebrew will help to widen the frontiers of understanding and to bring to the Hebrew movement an ever increasing measure of public support.

Parents Help Boy To Full Life Despite Handicap

When twelve-year-old Philip Bunin was a baby, doctors advised his mother that the child was an imbecile, deaf and blind, and should be put in an institution. Today Philip plays the piano, composes prolifically and graduated from Public School No. 132 in New York.

It turned out that Philip had an unrecognized case of cerebral palsy caused by injury to the nerve centers of the brain at birth. Neither blind nor deaf, he was taught to read and speak only through the painstaking efforts of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Bunin, of 605 West 182nd Street, who continued at home the therapeutic methods they had seen practiced in hospitals.

The musical training came from Mrs. Sadie Miller, a teacher specializing in music for handicapped children. Mrs. Miller congratulated Philip at her home and studio at 900 West End Avenue, for having been named a district winner in the National Guild of Piano Teachers auditions. Last year he was a national winner, but didn't try for it this year. Ten of Philip's compositions have been rated excellent to very good in the International Young Composer's tests.

Philip's musical career began three years ago, when his mother, Dorothy, thirty-seven, took him to Mrs. Miller. She was recommended by a nurse at the Neurological Institute at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center, where the boy was being treated. At the first lesson the afflicted boy's left hand flapped uncontrollably against the piano and the right hand was clenched and stiff, Mrs. Bunin said. But Philip seemed to be determined to go on.

In a short time, Philip was able to play little songs. His stiffness disappeared and he sat more upright. After about six months of lessons, Mrs. Miller asked the boy's mother to sing to the boy's accompaniment. To qualify for the auditions, Philip played from memory five selections from Mozart, Bach, Rameau, and Frust. He received a grade of 95 or superior. There are some chords that he cannot strike completely and must break them up into single notes.

Two other students who also have cerebral palsy, Miss Shirley Flacha, twenty-two, and Miss Gloria Zucker, nineteen, were rated good plus and excellent. Shirley has been playing only five months and also composes prolifically.

Mrs. Miller charges only what the parents can afford. Some pupils she teaches free and supplies music from a fund created by her relatives in memory of her mother, Mrs. Bessie Scheinerman. Officials at the United Cerebral Palsy Associations, which is trying to raise $5,000,000 to help victims of the malady, said that Philip's story is not unusual. Children who are afflicted have the same range of intelligence as normal children, but lack muscular and speech coordination.

About five years ago, according to the U. C. P. A., many doctors diagnosed cerebral palsy as retarded mentality, or deafness or blindness. About 500,000 persons in the United States are palsied. Many of them can be taught to be normal and valuable human beings.

In Philip's case, his mother hopes that he will take up some phase of music, although he will never be a great performer. The music has also helped him in school, where he has a better than 85 per cent average. Philip has a brother, Herbert, eighteen, not palsied. His father works for a stationer. His mother had to go to work to pay for the treatments at the various hospitals.

WOMAN AUTHOR HELPED FOUND CHILD CLINIC

Mrs. Marguerite K. Fischel, sixty-one, of 14 East Sixtieth Street, New York, died in New York Hospital. She was the widow of Dr. Ellis Fischel, of St. Louis, cancer specialist for whom the Missouri State Cancer Hospital at Columbia, Mo., is named. Mrs. Fischel, the former Marguerite Kaufman, was born in St. Louis.

In 1934 Mrs. Fischel wrote a book on the rehabilitation of children suffering from cerebral palsy, called "The Spastic Child," based on her experience with her two sons, John and Ellis. The book was the first in its field and won acceptance in a number of hospitals and clinics. As a result Mrs. Fischel helped in the establishment of a clinic for cerebral palsy children at the Cornell Medical Center. She worked there four years helping to train therapists and lecturing to technicians and nurses.

Mrs. Fischel, who studied music with Ernest Bloch, was also an accomplished musician, composer of a number of songs, and a member of the American Physicians' Art Association. In her later years she became a member of the Guild of American Economists and contributed poetry to its magazine, "Main Currents."

Surviving are her son, John Fischel, and a sister, Mrs. Leslie H. Thompson. Her other son, Ellis Fischel, died a number of years ago.

Now Is The Time For The Jewish Home

BY RABBI NORMAN N. SHAPIRO, GOEL YZEDEC SYNAGOGUE, TORONTO, ONTARIO

There was a time when the identity of a Jewish home was discernible from the time one opened the front door of the abode. The very tintypes on the wall, highlighting the yarmalkeh on the "Zadeh", to the sheitel and the Mogen Dovid on the "Babeh" bespoke the extraction of the occupants of the house. Some place in a dusty corner you were almost certain to find the "Chanukah menorah" and in the kitchen on a handy shelf, stood the kiddush cup, and the braided candle waiting for the "Havdalah" ceremony on Saturday night. A deep purple bag for the "balabos talais" was placed next to the sidur, and from the kitchen came the succulent and tantalizing odors of "gefuelte fish, and loeshen kugel".

"Those were the days," our parents and grandparents tell us. It was the time when a visit to the home of the grandparents for the traditional shabbos meal with the entire family present, was the most highly prized reward for weekly good behavior. That was the day of the real "Hag", the real holiday. That was the day of the magnificent Seder, the Chanukah Gelt, the exciting breaking of the Yom Kippur fast. That was the day when even in the diaspora, the Jew was king in his home, and all objects of Jewish ritual and ceremony were treated with the respect we "moderns" view a Picasso, a Chagall, a piece of sculpture by Epstein, a piece of music conducted by Bernstein, a recording of Casals, a block-printed fabric decorated with the excellent Americana of Grandma Moses, some exquisite silver smithed by Benvenuto Cellini.

These things we do not hesitate to bring into the Jewish home today, and combine them with our elegant period furniture, or our smooth functional twentieth century divans and tables. There is room for all art in the Jewish home. It may have been placed there by the interior decorator of the moment, chosen by him to his own taste and put into the room in such a subtle fashion as to be studiedly casual. It may not reflect the personalities, nor the choice of the home owner, but it is up to date and in the accepted style. Gone are the yellowed framed tintypes that had the name of the European photographer in the bottom right hand corner, gone the brass menorah and the braided candle, all these relegated to the attics of the past and having no place in the streamlined anesthetized world of the future. The children see these objects only as museum pieces in the Sunday or Day School. They are shown almost as archeologists would exhibit a Neanderthal skull, or a golden dish from the tomb of King Tut. These are the curiosities from another world, albeit a Jewish one.

Now with the advent of a Jewish state we are buying Israeli imports. These are of the same value as the silk kimona bought in San Francisco's Chinatown, or the totem poles purchased at tourist prices at a reservation near the spot where you spent your summer holidays. It is enough recommendation just to have the object come from Israel, it is true, but in what spirit do we buy? Do we buy to include in our studies decor? Do we buy with an eye to its permanent position in our everyday household, to designate to the visitor and to the children and to the parents that they have entered a proud Jewish home? I hardly think so.

We buy because of pride in our Jewish state. We buy to say that we have something from the very Holy Land in our homes. We return from our trips to the state of Israel, still without any thought as to what real Jewish art is. We have forgotten in our daily pursuits, that one of the most important factors surrounding Jewish art is "atmosphere". You cannot appreciate Jewish art without it. You cannot understand Jewish art without it. Yet it is in itself tantalizing and elusive in its simplicity, this Jewish "atmosphere", on which we must predicate our collection of Jewish art.

We begin with the basic ingredients. Pride, respect for ourselves and our heritage, and a positive attitude toward Jewish education which must be transmitted to the children. Now we can build step by step our Jewish art collection. The relics and remnants of the past can be blended into a pattern in the home. The old brass menorah can take its place on the elegant assymetrical mantle. Each symbol of Jewish life and living can be reinstated in the home. There is no longer a need for subduing a magnificent way of life, a pulsating culture. The Jewish artist and artisan have come into their own. Through the canvas we see the tragic beauty of the little Polish "Yeshiva Bocher", the harsh wintry European landscape, the ephemeral quality of the vaguely remembered little towns, the lushness of the land that was worked by, but never belonged to the Jew. All the secrets of our lost generation are preserved through the artist.

I once heard a young man seriously state the difference between a photograph and a painting. "Both mediums are of utmost importance", he said. "The photograph catches and preserves a lasting external image of someone as it was at one specific moment during a lifetime. It is never-changing and accurate. The painting preserves only a likeness of the subject, but it also preserves the intangible, the soul of its creator. Each must be utilized for its own value".

Now is the time for Jewish art. Now is the time for the Jewish home. The "Shekina" is present on the doorstep when the door swings inward revealing the Mezuzah, the Jewish content of paintings, sculpture, music, writing, handwork, ceremonials, and the never-to-be forgotten smell of real Jewish cooking, which ranks in its way as one of the greatest of all Jewish arts.

worse than death. Traitors, however, generally had faith in the ultimate triumph of the regime they worked for, so for them life imprisonment would not hold the same terror, he added.

Police Minister Behor Shitreet argued for the death penalty for murderers. He said that convicted killers serving life terms would become desperadoes. They might strangle guards or fellow prisoners, make desperate bids to escape and become terrors, knowing they had nothing to lose.

Another argument for retaining the maximum punishment was that the Arabs and some Jews from Oriental countries practiced blood vengeance. The kin of a murdered man feels honor bound to take the life of the killer or a member of his family. If the law merely sent killers to prison and did not take their lives, innocent relatives of the murderer would pay with their lives for the crime, it was argued.
